Job fair in Santa Ana continues Governor's initiative of matching veterans with employers and jobs

SANTA ANA – Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr. continued the Honor a Hero, Hire a Vet (HAH-HAV) initiative with a job and resource fair in Santa Ana today that brought together veterans seeking jobs, employers with openings to fill, and resource agencies offering a wide range of employment services.

The more than 60 employers at the fair included Cargill Meat, Wawona Frozen Foods, Tower Pest Control, Farmers Insurance, Airstreams Renewables, and The Wine Group. Also participating were 25 schools, training programs, service organizations, and government organizations.

The 2012 HAH-HAV fair was held at the Elks Lodge on South Elks Lane in Santa Ana. Now in its fifth year, HAH-HAV job fairs are being held at 10 locations throughout the state. The fairs offer veterans one-stop access to career, training and education opportunities. Current data shows that young veterans are particularly in need of assistance. In 2011, the unemployment rate for California veterans in the 20-24 year-old age group was 37.1 percent, which is more than double the 17.6 percent unemployment rate in the same age group who were not veterans.

In its first four years, the job fairs have linked 15,000 veterans with hundreds of employers and employment resource agencies. The fairs, funded this year by a $250,000 grant, provide public agencies and private companies not only the opportunity to demonstrate their support of the veterans' community, but also to address their business needs by having access to a large pool of job-ready candidates.

"The Honor a Hero, Hire a Vet job fairs are springboards for our brave veterans who are coming home from serving overseas and seeking new lives as productive, employed members of society," said Pam Harris, Director of the California Employment Development Department (EDD). "These exceptional men and women put their lives on the line for our freedoms. We owe it to them to help them transition from military life to civilian life. We are committed to matching these talented veterans with jobs that will open the way to a bright future."

Peter James Gravett, Secretary of the California Department of Veterans Affairs (CDVA), said of the fairs: "One of the best ways to honor our veterans for their selfless service and sacrifice is to help them find meaningful careers in civilian life."

The multi-agency initiative brings together EDD, CDVA, California Labor and Workforce Development Agency, California Department of Industrial Relations' Division of Apprenticeship Standards, and California Community Colleges. An energetic outreach through television, radio, newspapers and social media has helped to double and even triple the participation in these fairs by employers, schools, apprenticeship programs and other providers.

California is home to nearly two million veterans, the largest number in the nation. The EDD's Workforce Services Offices play a key role in providing veterans with ongoing job search services and case management. Veterans bring with them unique work skills and character traits valued by employers. Ninety-five percent of California veterans have high school diplomas and almost half have associate degrees or higher. Many of them have mastered high-tech skills in the military.
